(Kind of a 'bug', k	out I go on to suggest further features)
The 'mandatory'	attribute doesn't seem to do much (se	e updated example project), i.e. I	can choose to not tick anything and still proceed to the ne	ext question.

Should a checkbox ever be mandatory? The select a minimum / maximum would be fairly straightforward to implement, the specified less so (but if minimum == maximum that would work). Like the idea of an 'Other' box, we'd need to specify that as a fixed name: <option name="other">Please Specify</option> Would always generate a text box entry with please specify as the default value. Currently the checkbox output takes the items and reports back using the name as an identifier such as <option name="hwDesign" checked="false"/> so incorporating the other box into this may not be so straight forward.

Something like 'select at least/most three' seems like fairly basic survey behaviour so if it's not too much hassle I'd like to implement it. I was mainly surprised that I could ignore a checkbox question even if it was 'mandatory'.
